december 2007 iRV2.com RV Community - Are you about to start a new improvement on your RV or need some help with some maintenance? You can discuss forum, trade and more! Have any of you used this program? or only have seen it? it's free and is relatively good but there are things that it can't decode properly... In the latest firmware update (I assume it's the one released last month) they added CDDA (which in case of the CHIP it means CD) support, if you had this version of the CHIP software, you'd notice that that's how you get the CDDA files. It's easier to read the raw CDDA files without the programs because they're compressed but maybe that's why there's an update, so that it can read properly the CDDA stuff, not sure though. If you have the firmware (the whole thing, that's like a set of 3 or 4 parts) you can get a decoder from Pirinut, the price is pretty cheap, it comes as a USB dongle (not sure if you can get it that way) The thing is that the firmware file in the package they send to you is compressed, but the decoder can't read that. The decoder also has a very simple interface, there's no GUI (I think there was one on the early versions but not sure if it's still there) With it, you don't need to have the CD in the computer to decode your CD, you can do it even if the program is closed, no need to install it in the computer. I use it to decode my CDs and it works well, but be careful with the decoder, there's one (the superchip comes with 2) that get and keeps the tracks even if they're not playing. There's no way of telling which one you're getting. You need to reset the decoder before using it. It's not that I don't want you to answer it, I'm just asking if anyone is using this program for audio stuff, so that I can make some comparisons between different softwares that can decode CDDA (or perhaps even XMPCD). I will download it from here and see what the differences are. I use it for CD and it works fine. I think it's the same as the other programs but I have a limited budget and I'm 82157476af
